

FUSCO & MACALUSO

CRIMINAL LAW

What if I am accused of Probation Violation?

People with felony or misdemeanor probation who sometimes fail to comply with their specific conditions of probation may receive serious penalties if they violate their probation rules. If that happens, they may face a revocation of probation which can result in a jail or state prison sentence or term. These violations can often be successfully defended, BUT only by a truly experienced lawyer, such as Anthony J. Fusco, Jr.

Mr. Fusco's many years of experience can offer you the help and advice you need and with that, will help you decide which strategies to pursue to avoid the loss of your probation. When your probation violation hearing is held, Mr. Fusco will be with you every step of the way to defend you.

Fusco and Macaluso will be your team to help you put on witnesses and present documents and other evidence in your defense to avoid a finding that you violated your probation. I believe and I have learned that there is usually is a compelling reason why a person has failed to comply with probation.

I, Anthony J. Fusco, Jr., can skillfully defend you at probation violation hearings by preparing a defense that corroborates the compelling reason or reasons for your noncompliance with probation.

Your freedom and record are too important to entrust to an inexperienced attorney. With over 35 years of experience, devoted exclusively to the practice of criminal law, I, Anthony J. Fusco, Jr. Attorney at Law have successfully defended hundreds of people in all areas of criminal law.

IF YOU ARE CHARGED WITH A PROBATION VIOLATION, CONTACT MY OFFICE FOR A FREE CONSULTATION ON HOW TO AVOID A REVOCATION OF YOUR PROBATION.